

We've delivered thousands of homes.

I'm proudest of the parts almost nobody sees.

Ask me about a launch number—
and honestly, it blurs.

What I remember with total clarity:
the details we fixed when we didn't have to.

The grout on one floor was half a shade off.

We redid it. Because we'd know.

Customers don't remember your brochure.

They remember whether the promise was true when they moved in.

Scale doesn't change that answer.
It just multiplies who finds out.*

We don't celebrate units sold.
We obsess over the details no
one forces us to fix.

BUILDER'S LOG

That's where the next version of the company is hiding.

What's the invisible detail your customers actually judge you on?
